FARM WORKERS PROTEST IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT LAXITY AT SUPREME COURT JUSTICE SPEECH

Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark's Town Hall speech at the Ambassador Hotel was the site for a non-violent demonstration by the Delano Farm Workers this evening.

Justice Clark was to give a speech commemorating Law Day throughout the nation. The Farm Workers decided to celebrate what they called their first 'When-Will-You-Enforce-The-Law Day' as a protest of what they cited as a laxity of enforcement of the nation's immigration laws.

Tony Mendez, spokesman for the Farm Workers Union, pointed out that large numbers of aliens from Mexico are presently breaking the law by working on the Giumarra grape farms during an authentic labor dispute.

These green card bearing strike breakers are making it hard on American citizens by ignorantly accepting slave wages given them by the Giumarra management while unionized farm workers are making a living wage,' said Mendez.

'Last year our grape boycott cost Giumarra over a million dollars and this year we will force management to the negotiating table, but first the Federal Government must enforce its laws equally.

Today is Law Day and Justice Clark will tell us how the law must be enforced for a better America and the Farm Workers agree with him. Justice Clark should tell his son Attorney General Clark to enforce the immigration law against strike-breakers for a better America.

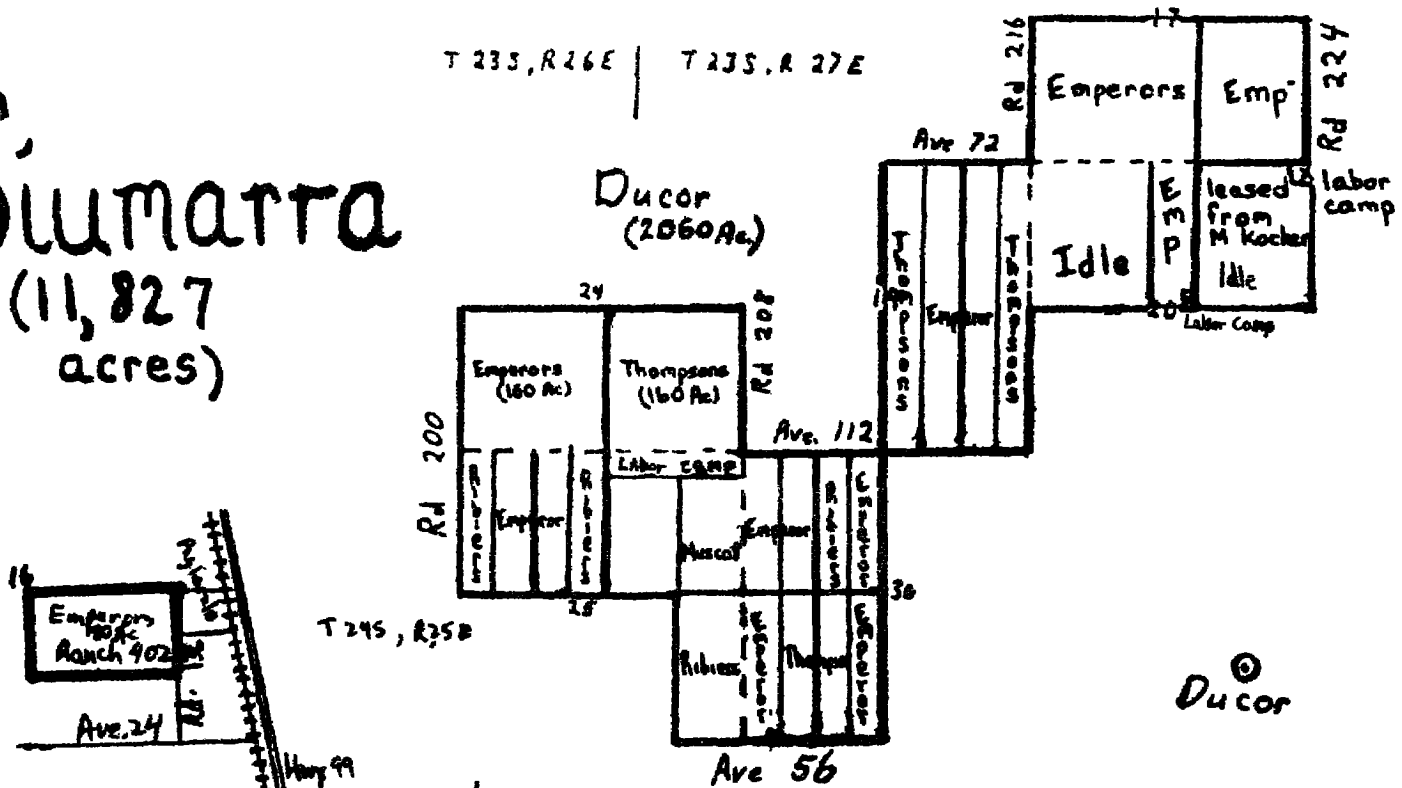

The Delano Farm Workers, known officially as the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO, have been organizing Mexican-American and Filipino farm workers in California's San Joaquin Valley since 1965.

Thus far the leader of the union, Cesar Chavez, has stressed non-violence in the campaign. To symbolize that stress, Chavez recently completed a 25 day fast. Thousands flocked to the closing ceremony including Senator Robert Kennedy, who later asked Chavez to join his California Presidential delegation.

The union has protested the laxity in immigration law enforcement before. Their protests involved closing the U.S. Mexican border at Rio Grande City, Texas.
